ADA KESSLER WINS GENE KELLY AWARD

Queens Assistant District Attorney Scott E. Kessler earned the 22nd Annual Gene Kelly Award from the Queens DA's Office. The award honors former ADA Gene Kelly, who died in 1992 after serving for more than 14 years as a Queens prosecutor. The award is presented each year to an ADA who most exemplifies Kelly's spirit, commitment to trial work and dedication to justice, the DA's office said. "This year's Gene Kelly Award goes to Scott Kessler for his leadership and contributions to the Queens District Attorney's Office during his long tenure with the office," said District Attorney Richard Brown. "In his 30 years here, ADA Kessler has positively impacted the lives of thousands of victims of domestic abuse by making sure their abusers are held accountable for their crimes."

Fresh off a video shoot in Miami, rapper Cardi B graced Queens Criminal Court on Friday to face charges stemming from a College Point bar fight.

The Bronx-born diva, whose real name is Belcalis Marlenis Almánzar, was arraigned on assault, harassment and reckless endangerment charges for allegedly telling almost eight members of her team, including Tawana Jackson-Morel and Jeffrey Bush, to throw alcohol and glass bottles at two bartenders, according to the criminal complaint.

The bartenders, who are sisters, were accused by Almánzar of having sex with her now-estranged husband Offset. Almánzar announced on Instagram this week that they are going through a divorce.

If there's a St. John's School of Law event, there's a good chance Dean Michael Simons will be there, posing for selfies and fostering community among students and staff.

"In my view, one of the key parts of leadership is creating a community," Simons said. "Our students will do their best when they feel supported and a big part of that is feeling like they're part of the community."

Simons said he considers St. John's Law School to be a "local law school in the World's City," which means the school promotes an inclusive culture that reflects its hometown while preparing students for careers around the world.

Jackson-Morel admitted to police that she “smacked a drink on her,” according to court documents.

Almánzar, 26, entered the Kew Gardens courthouse minutes before 9 a.m. in Christian Louboutin booties, a fur-collared black wool coat and rainbow-colored hair under a tan fedora. The reality star wasn’t thrilled about the media scrum waiting to memorialize her first touch in the criminal justice system.

“Why the cameras gotta be there?” Cardi said to her attorney Jeff Kern, who requested a second call for the case.

The “Drip” songstress skipped her scheduled arraignment on Monday and was chastised by Assistant District Attorney Ryan Nicolosi as the case was officially called around 9:30 a.m.

“The case was originally scheduled on October 29 we put it over until December 3 everyone was here except for the Almánzar,” said Nicolosi.

Almánzar stared down Nicolosi as he said “she comes when its convenient for her.”

Nicolosi requested an “inconsequential” bail amount of $2,500 that the judge denied. Almánzar stuck her tongue out — her signature facial expression — when the judge released on her own recognizance.

Queens Criminal Court Judge Scott Dunn gave Almánzar strict instructions about the orders of protections for the two Angels Strip Club bartenders.

Almánzar, who is nominated for five

Grammys, shook her head in agreement and exited the courthouse into a swarm of camera flashes. The judge ordered her back in court on Jan. 31.

ALLEGED GANG MEMBERS CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY

Brandon Bledman and Kaminski Gauthieri are charged with second-degree conspiracy for allegedly conspiring to kill rivals. Bledman and Gauthier appear in K5 for a conference.

Bledman and Gauthier, along with four other alleged members of the Bloods gang, were indicted on multiple charges of conspiracy to kill their rivals, Queens County District Attorney Richard A. Brown announced in a joint statement with NYPD Commissioner James O’Neill in September.

Brown said the six men, who range in age from 22 to 29, belong to the Wood City Gang, a Bloods subset, based in St. Albans and Springfield Gardens.

“The defendants in this case are accused of shooting at two rival gang members — creating havoc in our neighborhoods and threatening the lives and safety of innocent bystanders,” Brown said in a statement. “The defendants are variously accused of turning our communities into danger zones with senseless gun violence. The individuals are charged with acting in concert with one or more co-defendants to shoot and wound rival gang members. Their alleged criminal and violent acts have no place in a civilized society.”

“This is truly a very sad case in which a fifteen-month-old baby lost her life allegedly at the hands of her own mother — the woman who was supposed to nurture and care for her,” said Queens DA Richard Brown. “If the allegations prove true, the defendant will have to live the rest of her life knowing that her actions and hers alone were responsible for the death of her child.”

MOTHER BRUTALLY ASSAULTED AFTER TAKING KID TO SCHOOL

Ronald Williams is charged with first-degree assault for allegedly sexually assaulting a woman in Kew Gardens shortly after she dropped her child off at a nearby school. Williams appears in APN for a conference.

Prosecutors say Williams, 21, followed the woman into her Kew Gardens apartment complex before raping and beating her. The 52-year-old victim was found unconscious in an outdoor stairwell. She was injured with severe bruises to her face and body.

“The defendant brutally attacked a Queens mother so viciously that she was unrecognizable when she was found unconscious at the bottom of a building’s stairwell,” said Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown. “No one should have to worry about fending off a sexual attack on the streets of our county at any time of the day or night. Despite the defendant’s efforts to escape justice, he was fortunately apprehended and will now stand accountable for this horrific crime.”

Williams was arrested in Columbia, South Carolina in May and transported back to Queens, where he was charged with the brutal attack.

“I pushed her down the stairs. I wasn’t going to rape her. I don’t know how her pants got pulled down. I get angry and black out sometimes,” Williams allegedly told police.

Land Grab: Everyone Wants a Piece Of New York’s Marijuana Tax Revenue

Officials: Poor Neighborhoods Should Get Restitution Funds

By Mary Frost
BQ Daily Eagle

Rival groups are putting in their bids now to get a chunk of an expected windfall in marijuana tax revenue, as New York state moves closer to legalizing cannabis for adult use.

Some Brooklyn officials are pushing for a “cannabis equity program” to benefit communities of color who have suffered from past disparities in marijuana enforcement.

Another group is eyeing this revenue to help fix the subway system — which the MTA estimates will need roughly $40 billion over the next 10 years.

Others want some of these resources to go to women getting into the cannabis business.

The pot tax could bring in roughly $336 million annually for New York City and $436 for the state, according to the state Comptroller’s Office.

NYC Comptroller Scott Stringer backs the idea of using the funds to correct historic injustices.

The city “has long-targeted communities that are among the most economically insecure, resulting in damaged credit, loss of employment, housing and more,” he said in a statement on Thursday. “As we move toward creating a legal market that will generate billions of dollars, we have to ensure that we correct historic injustices and backwards policies of the past.”

Stringer wants the city to establish a NYC cannabis equity program, be inclusive when it issues pot licenses, and award funds “on a competitive basis” to poor neighborhoods with the highest proportion of marijuana-related arrests.

The Comptroller’s Office found Brownsville and Ocean Hill had the highest average marijuana-related arrest rate between 2010 and 2017, followed by East New York and Starrett City. His report correlated marijuana arrests with low income and credit scores, with Brownsville having both the highest arrest rate and lowest median credit score (598) in the city.

Pot Arrests Down, But Communities of Color Still Bearing the Brunt

Despite a decline in marijuana arrests since Mayor Bill de Blasio took office in 2014, black and Latino people still made up a disproportionate number of those arrested for marijuana possession from 2014-2016, according to a report commissioned by the Drug Policy Alliance.

“Above any other considerations, revenue from that industry must be used to revitalize the very communities of more color that have been targeted by these unjust policies for too long,” Councilmember Jumaane Williams (D-East Flatbush-Midwood) said in a statement on Friday. “No proposal can be put ahead of the people who have been victimized for decades by the criminalization of black and brown communities as a result of prohibition.”

Though the Brooklyn District Attorney’s Office has stopped persecuting violators for possession of a small amount of pot, it still prosecutes those caught smoking a joint in a public place, the office told WNYC.

Queens officials, on the other hand, haven’t been as kind to the idea halting the prosecution of low-level marijuana offenses. Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown told the Eagle in August that his office would wait to see how the New York Police Department’s new marijuana enforcement policies play out but would continue to prosecute offenders.

“We will evaluate the arrests made by the NYPD and will proceed with valid cases — the vast majority of which are eligible for an adjournment in contemplation of dismissal,” Brown said. “We will continue to offer dispositions that are appropriate.”

State Sen. Liz Krueger, Senate sponsor of the Marijuana Regulation and Taxation Act (MRTA), said at the 2018 Cannabis Summit in October that drug enforcement policy “disproportionately” impacts young people of color” and harms the communities they come from.

“I believe that we need to create a robust and broad market for legal cannabis in New York state, which provides for taxation and regulation and job creation and economic distribution of the advantages of a new business model in New York. But with heavy emphasis on making sure that the communities which faced the most harm from 50 years of bad prohibition for a policy are not left out in the cold,” she said.

The restitution theme was repeated throughout the Cannabis Summit, with one panel composed entirely of women hoping to help other women and minorities get a chunk of the market.

Panel member and Brooklyn resident Gia Maron, the executive VP of Women Grow, said she believes that cannabis could offer a model featuring women in leadership roles. “I’ve seen canna-curious women come to Women Grow and one year later they’re in business,” she told the Eagle. “The opportunities for women are vast.”

But others want to use that money to fix the subways. City Council Speaker and possible 2021 mayoral candidate Corey Johnson is one of them, according to The New York Times. Another is former speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito.

Mayor Bill de Blasio on Friday brought the idea up to WNYC’s Brian Lehrer on his Friday morning radio show. The mayor said he needed a bit more time to consider how the money should be spent.

“We need to get the regulatory framework right from the beginning,” he told Lehrer. “There are real safety issues, real health issues, there’s huge issues of how we stop corporate America from taking over the marijuana industry in this state and doing exactly what the tobacco industry did, doing exactly what the pharmaceutical manufacturers did with opioids, and pushing a product and doing it in a very corporate manner with no regard to communities and no economic empowerment of communities. We — before we jump — we have a chance to get this right and I’m going to be speaking to that in the coming weeks.”

He added, “All of that will come together April 1,” the first of the New York state fiscal year.

Tuna: A Bright Future or 'Sorry, Charlie'?

By Danny Tyree

I'm a big fan of comfort foods, but a recent headline made me feel decidedly uncomfortable.

"Tuna seeks return to salad days," blared the Wall Street Journal.

To my dismay, once-ubiquitous canned tuna has fallen upon hard times. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, per capita consumption dropped 42 percent between 1986 and 2016.

I'm disappointed by snobbish modern consumers who sneer at canned tuna. My fellow Baby Boomers and our parents certainly gobbled down mass quantities like good Americans, even though Charlie the Tuna made an unnerving animated spokes-tuna for StarKist.

Charlie was the antithesis of Chick-fil-A's cows painting "Eat Mor Chikin" graffiti. Charlie BEGGED to be caught and processed and consumed by StarKist's customers. Talk about one sick puppy. Speaking of which, I'm surprised Madison Avenue didn't produce cigarette commercials with sick puppies. ("Smoke that second pack with the confidence that at least you don't have mange and tapeworms.")

I guess the slow decline of canned tuna began decades ago because of worries about potential mercury poisoning. The industry should've done a better job of responding. ("Beef: it may be what's for dinner, but will it take your TEMPERATURE?") They should've expanded into the medical benefits of other seafood. ("The chowder that mimics a stethoscope." "Squid tentacles that tell you to turn your head and cough.")

And I suppose people wearied of the great "tuna fish" redundancy. ("Sigh Sorry, sir, we're fresh out of tuna FISH; but I have some lovely tuna MARSUPIAL. It comes with its own pouch for holding the mayo.")

Canned tuna struggles to catch on with younger consumers, who prefer fresher, less-processed options (if they eat tuna at all). Canned tuna is deemed too INCONVENIENT for younger shoppers. With no guarantee of a Purple Heart, they are sometimes forced to endure the living hell of opening the can, draining the water and fetching a uten-

sil. ("It's like being dragged back to the days of landline pushmovers and landline iceboxes or whatever, dude.")

According to the Journal, many millennials don't even own a can opener! Folks, this is not butter churn and spinning wheel territory. No one is asking you to steal a can opener from the Pioneer Days craft fair. Museums have generously turned a few loose for the general public. Oh, to be a fly on the wall. ("Open, can — open! Baby, I think this universal remote is broken!")

Today's consumers complain that traditional canned tuna smells too "fishy." Folks in Biblical times got on the last nerve of prophets, but surely, they weren't THIS whiney. The 5,000 whom Jesus fed with five loaves and two small fishes were thrilled to get a meal. There's no record of anyone complaining, "Can't we have something that smells like brimstone instead? And were any locusts harmed in this meal's preparation?"

The tuna industry is valiantly trying to reboot demand for the product with resealable bowls, meal kits and premium lines of safer, more sustainable high-quality fish.

They want to make tuna cool and exciting again. Hey, maybe they can use distressed cans, all pre-rusted and decorated by ball peen hammers. ("Only twice the price? Pinch me — I'm dreaming!")

Don't get me started on the mad dash to desecrate good ol' tuna with TRENDY FLAVORS, like "Hot Buffalo Style."

Move over "Eat Mor Chikin." I guess it's time for "Kater To Mor Filisteenz."

Increasing Hazards For Pedestrians

By Joan Klips
Special to the BQ Daily Eagle

The proposed increase in the supply of rental bicycles in NYC means a drastic increase in the number of hazardous situations for New Yorkers to endure. In a city that is already congested with vehicles and bicycles, it is surely a step in the wrong direction — and pedestrians will be the losers.

On Aug. 31, I fell over a rack of rental bicycles on Broadway and 32nd Street. I required three stitches in my forehead and an overnight stay in the emergency room. Why do we need rental bicycles in the midst of the hustle and bustle of package-laden people rushing about as they shop at Macy's or The Manhattan Mall?

Societies (and American cities) are judged by how they treat the infirm and the elderly. How are these groups of people supposed to navigate the streets safely when they may be slowed down by the use of canes, walkers, or impaired vision? And what about people with strollers or luggage on wheels?

All of us, regardless of age, will be in increased danger from speeding bicyclists who don't observe traffic rules. We all need space within which to navigate street crossings safely. And increasing the number of bicycles on the street will interfere with that safe space.

One possible answer is the use of pedestrian corridors, lanes that are dedicated for use by pedestrians only, where we can safely walk without vehicles and bicycles. We already have some of these designated areas in Midtown Manhattan.

Let's spend more time and effort in creating safe spaces for all of us. Let's demand safety for pedestrians as a priority. We all deserve it.

Joan Klips is a resident of Dyker Heights.

Dem Leader: Infrastructure Bills Must Tackle Climate Change

By Kevin Freking and Matthew Daly
The Associated Press

Democratic leaders in Congress demanded Friday that major legislation on roads, bridges and other infrastructure include efforts to curb global warming, complicating prospects for a deal with President Donald Trump on a jobs-boosting bill that both parties have targeted as a priority.

Sen. Chuck Schumer of Brooklyn said Friday in a letter to Trump that climate change will cause “untold human suffering and significant damage to the U.S. economy” if left unchecked. The New York Democrat called for permanent tax credits to boost production of wind and solar energy and to make homes and offices more energy efficient. He also urged loans to communities that would invest in projects that limit damage caused by hurricanes and other natural disasters.

The letter comes as liberal groups and lawmakers — including Democratic U.S. Rep.-elect Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York — push to ensure that policies to address climate change remain at the top of the Democrats’ legislative agenda. Ocasio-Cortez, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders and other progressives are calling for a “Green New Deal” that would ramp up efforts to install solar panels and wind turbines and manufacture more electric vehicles.

Trump and congressional leaders from both parties have singled out infrastructure investment as an issue that Republicans and Democrats could potentially rally around next year after Democrats assume control of the House. But Trump has made it a priority to undo his predecessor’s efforts to curb global warming, voicing concerns that they get in the way of a strong economy.

Trump also has rejected a central conclusion of a dire report on the economic costs of climate change released by his own administration. The report, issued last month, warned that natural disasters are worsening in the United States because of global warming, with costs approaching $400 billion since 2015.

“I don’t believe it,” Trump said.

Lawmakers are already expected to struggle with the question of how to pay for an infrastructure bill, which is likely to cost hundreds of billions of dollars even as federal budget deficits are expected to soar above $1 trillion this year. Using the infrastructure bill to address environmental concerns is certain to add additional tensions to the mix.

House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi, who is seeking to become speaker in January, has indicated she will likely reinstate a special committee on climate change, although exact details have not been finalized. Pelosi created the committee when she became speaker in 2007, but it was disbanded after Republicans won back the House in 2010. Pelosi said Democrats will rebuild America with “with clean energy, smart technology and resilient infrastructure.”

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer of Brooklyn walks through the Capitol in Washington, D.C., last week. Schumer joined other liberal politicians like Sen. Bernie Sanders and U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez in a push to call for climate change policies.

Dean Simons Strives to Foster Diverse Community at SJU

"Diversity and inclusion is a core value for St. John's and that goes back to our founding" in 1925, Simons said. "That's the culture we try to actively create from the very first day of orientation all through graduation and studying for the bar."

In late November, Simons joined a cohort of students who had just passed the bar exam for a celebration. It's one of many such gatherings that demonstrates how the Red Storm community persists even after freshly minted lawyers embark on their new careers.

Prominent SJU Law alumni include several prosecutors in the Queens District Attorney's office and Queens Borough President Melinda Katz. The school also trains students for careers elsewhere in the U.S. and the world and attracts scores of foreign attorneys.

St. John's Law has also focused on attracting students who reflect the diverse races, ethnicities, income levels and experiences of Queens.

"The school was founded in large part to provide opportunities to recent immigrants and the children of recent immigrants who were being shut out of other law schools," Simons said.

SJU still has work to do to diversify its student body, but it has become more equitable in recent years. The schools has attracted more women and people of color while providing more scholarships to low-income students.

Simons said the school strives to uphold the tenets of the Order of St. Vincent, on which the university was founded.

"The Vincentian Mission is serving the poor," he said. "Law is power and the license to practice law gives lawyers a particular and important power in our society. For that power to be wielded in a just and fair way, lawyers and legal profession have to look like Americans."

To achieve that, SJU Law runs 12 clinics that enable law students to work with low-income clients.

"Practical skills training is very important and much of that takes place in the field," Simons said. "That experience of directly helping the poor is also important for students to help them be more effective lawyers and it's part of our mission."

St. John's University School of Law was founded in 1925 as a law school for immigrants and low-income students "shut out" of other local law schools, Dean Michael Simons said. Photo via St. John's

Brooklyn Woman Is on a Mission to ‘Quiet the Anger’ and Reduce Stress

BQ Daily Eagle

Charlotte pastor and face of the popular Car Chronicles Movement Jamelia Young-Mitchell has penned “The Death of the Angry Black Woman” — a book published by Warren Publishing that discusses stereotypes faced by African-American women. The book released at #1 on Amazon.com for New Releases in the Anger Management category.

Anger can get the best of many women, but when anger erupts into rage and leads to shouting, fighting and name-calling, it’s time to look within and make a change. “The Death of the Angry Black Woman” boldly acknowledges stereotypes faced by women in the black community and uncovers the seeds that lead many to live anger-filled lives. Instilled with Biblical scripture and jaw-dropping honesty, this debut book from Pastor Jamelia Young-Mitchell, the voice behind the popular Car Chronicles Movement, will empower you to bury your anger, reject false labels and embrace the new you.

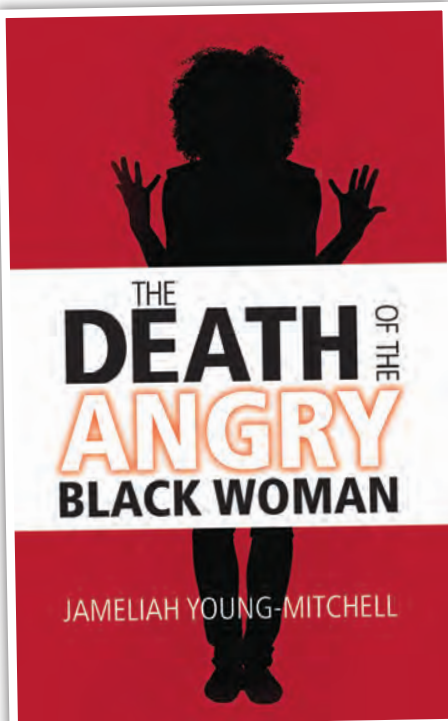

“I wrote this book for all the women out there who are dealing with anger that they have yet to find the source of,” said Young-Mitchell. “Many women in the black community come from backgrounds of abuse, mistreatment, violence—and they become fighters. Through my book I hope to be that voice in their head, the one we all hear but rarely acknowledge, encouraging them to move on, let go of anger, reject hateful labels, embrace their powerful femininity and live the life God intended them to live.”

Pastor Jamelia Young-Mitchell is the daughter of the late Evangelist Violetta B. Young and Pastor James I. Young, and grew up in Brooklyn as the youngest of four kids. She has preached across the United States and internationally and is the pastor of Unity Church Charlotte.

Young-Mitchell is an experienced keynote speaker for women’s empowerment, teen and youth mentoring, corporate America and relationships. She is the voice behind the popular Car Chronicles Movement where she can be seen live on Facebook Monday through Friday at 7:30 a.m. Young-Mitchell is the proud mother of a son and daughter and resides in Charlotte, North Carolina, with her husband, Calvin W. Mitchell.

Ex-Texas Juvenile Justice System Youth Believes in Books

By Alyson Ward
The Associated Press

The right book, Dieter Cantu believes, can change your life.

The Houston Chronicle reports when Cantu was growing up in San Antonio, getting shipped off to foster care and sent to live with relatives, he never had the books he was hungry to read.

“I was always interested in things,” Cantu said. “I didn’t just have access to learn about those things.”

In his teens, Cantu spent four years in the Texas juvenile justice system after pleading guilty to aggravated robbery. He landed at three different detention centers, but the only books he could find were outdated, fiction or written for kids — nothing that fed his hunger for practical knowledge.

Today, at 29, Cantu has a career and a college degree. And in the past year, he has collected thousands of nonfiction volumes to fill the shelves at juvenile detention facilities and underserved libraries.

Cantu wants teens to get out of juvenile detention and do something good. Books, he says, can help them change their lives.

Cantu thought up his Books to Incarcerated Youth Project after visiting detention facilities as a guest speaker.

He moved to Houston last year and now works as a program manager for the Harris County Youth Collective, which focuses on “dual-involved” youth who are served by Child Protective Services and part of the juvenile justice system at the same time.

But outside of his job, he’s invited to speak regularly to the kids at youth detention centers, because he’s been in their shoes.

When he was 16, Cantu was in a car with three older friends as they rode around downtown San Antonio, robbing people at gunpoint. The police picked them up at a red light, and Cantu — the only minor in the group — quickly pleaded guilty so he could avoid being tried as an adult. He was sentenced to 10 years in juvenile detention.

In the four years he served, Cantu said he escaped into books. But he remembers being hungry for the volumes he couldn’t find — the ones that would help him directly, and maybe make up for his lack of access to Google.

“I wasn’t interested in the ‘Harry Potters’ or the ‘To Kill a Mockingbirds,’ things like that,” he said. “But I was interested in how to start a business, how to become an entrepreneur. Psychology. Theology. Finance.”

In this August 2018, photo, Dieter Cantu poses for a photo in Houston, in front of books he has collected. He takes the books to juvenile detention centers and mentors children who are in juvy now.

He wanted to do something substantial and lasting. So last year, he started asking for book donations.

Cantu, who pledged the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity in college, has enlisted the help of his fraternity brothers at college chapters all over Texas. They’ve helped him gather book donations at the University of Houston, Sam Houston State University, Baylor University, the University of North Texas and other schools — including his alma mater, the University of Texas at San Antonio.

Today, Cantu’s project has amassed thousands of books. Books about history, geography and math. There are dictionaries, atlases and encyclopedias, writing guides and old textbooks, biographies and self-help books.

Many have been distributed at juvenile facilities across the state. Hundreds — maybe thousands — more are in storage units and stacked up in Cantu’s Montrose home, waiting for a place to go.

The books have a chance to change lives in the detention centers, said Chip Walters, who retired this year as a senior director at the Texas Juvenile Justice Department. He was a correctional officer at one of the youth detention facilities, Giddings State School, when Cantu first started speaking to young inmates.

“People want to donate ‘Harry Potter’ and stuff for those guys — and they need that, too,” Walters said. But the instructional nonfiction books Cantu is providing are different, he said. More than a distraction or an escape, they can be “a tool for someone who sincerely wants to make a change and wants to help themselves make that change.”

Like other teens in the juvenile system, Cantu had to present a correctional plan before he was released — an outline for what he planned to do after his release. He earned a GED while serving time, but he had plans to go to college, start a non-profit and, at least then, he wanted to go into the fashion industry.

“It sounds good and it sounds ideal,” Cantu said. “But a lot of youth don’t follow that plan, because once they’re released, it’s not even something they can imagine. How do I start? Where do I start? Who can I connect with? None of those things are possible.”

When he was released in 2009, Cantu said, he stumbled. He wanted to go to school, study fashion and start a clothing line. But he didn’t have a clue how to enroll in college, much less how to pay for it.

“Once I was released I jumped on the internet and started trying to figure things out,” Cantu said. He used Google to find out about college applications and financial aid, and found his way to a community college. He earned an associate’s degree there before moving on to UTSA for a bachelor’s degree.

Along the way, Cantu created a brand called “Respect Women” and began to sell T-shirts. He founded a nonprofit, Position of Power, to help fix the poverty-prison cycle.

He figured everything out through “trial and error,” Cantu said. Now he’s mentoring young offenders to help them set career goals and learn how to reach those goals.

“I just give that testimony to these youth a lot,” Cantu said. “It’s going to be hard. It’ll take a while. But the difference is, I made those mistakes and figured it out for you, in a sense.”

When he was in detention, Cantu said he heard motivational speeches from people who didn’t offer more than words and a short visit.

“That’s what disappointed me,” he said. “Somebody from the church program would come on a Sunday and give words of encouragement, and I’d never see them again.”

Cantu didn’t want to be that guy. So he’s set up a plan to keep corresponding with the teens who are behind bars.

“We follow up with a pen pal system: ‘Here’s my information. . We can talk back and forth. And all your personal stress, you can vent that to us.’”

When he can’t handle all the correspondence, Cantu calls on volunteers from Alpha Phi Alpha, his fraternity, to assist.

Richard Azagidi started helping Cantu a few months ago. A fellow Alpha Phi Alpha member, he’d graduated from the University of Houston and wanted to continue doing community volunteer work.

He’d heard about Cantu’s book project. “Then one day I read up on his past and saw everything he did,” Azagidi said. “I was very inspired.”

Azagidi has seen Cantu work with kids directly, he said — including one young man who had just been released from juvie.

“He took him out to get him some food and professional clothes, talked to him about career plans,” Azagidi said.

“He deserves so much credit for the things he’s done,” said Walters, the retired juvenile justice director. “This is a young man who’s really stepped forward and made some significant changes in his life.”

Borough President Katz Appoints Pauline Healy To Queens Library Board

By Jonathan Sperling
Queens Daily Eagle

A Douglaston resident is the newest member of the Queens Library's board of trustees, Borough President Melinda Katz announced on Friday.

Attorney Pauline Healy, who has served as the director of agency standards at New York Life Insurance Company's Melville, NY office since May 2015, will be responsible for ensuring the office's compliance with the company's rules and with state and federal laws, according to Katz.

"Having spent most of my life as a Queens resident and frequent patron of the Queens Libraries, both for myself and my daughter, I'm thankful that Borough President Katz has appointed me to the Queens Library Board of Trustees," said Healy.

Healy, who earned a bachelor's degree in psychology from New York University in 1987 and a juris doctor degree from St. John's University School of Law in 1993, joined the New York Life Insurance Company in 1996 and worked there until 2002, at which time she joined the AXA Equitable insurance company.

"I'm committed to using my legal background and business and communication skills to ensure that the Queens Library is governed with transparency and fiscal soundness, so that it may continue to provide quality service to the diverse residents of Queens who rely on their Libraries to provide a vast array not only of books and other media, but of educational, cultural and community programs," said Healy.

She returned to New York Life as a Senior Agency Standards Consultant in 2012 and became Director of Agency Standards in May 2015.

Healy has also served as board president and legal chair of the Douglas Manor Association from 2012 to 2014. Her responsibilities there included presiding over community meetings, negotiating contracts, addressing community concerns, settling legal disputes and overseeing the content of the association's newsletters and other publications, according to Katz.

"Pauline Healy is a skilled and conscientious attorney who will be a valuable addition to the Queens Library Board," said Katz. "Ms. Healy brings with her a wealth of experience that will help enhance the governance and efficacy of our borough's beloved public library system," she added.

Killer Cousins Sentenced to 25 To Life For 2015 Murder

By Christina Carrega
Queens Daily Eagle

A pair of cousins may spend the rest of their lives behind bars after they were convicted for shooting a Bronx man to death after a party.

Neon Osouna and Brandon Williams were sentenced to 25 years to life in prison by Queens Supreme Court Justice Michael Aloise on Thursday for the murder of Donald Reed on Dec. 26, 2015. "This was a senseless killing during what should have been a festive holiday season. A 35-year-old father was gunned down early in the morning on a residential street," said Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown. "The defendants in this case were convicted of murder and have been sentenced to a lengthy term of incarceration for this deadly shooting."

Osouna, 38, was the owner of the Smoke Shop on Guy R. Brewer Boulevard and Williams, 37, was a bouncer where 35-year-old Reed attended a party with friends. After Reed left the club, he went to a bodega nearby where Osouna and Williams engaged in a shootout, prosecutors said. During the gunfire exchange, Reed was hit four times and died from his injuries.

FDNY's Chief Bumped Amid 'Abusive Behavior' Accusations

By Todd Maisel
Queens Daily Eagle

The second-in-command at the city's fire department was placed on modified duty and reassigned pending an internal investigation for allegations of "abusive behavior" towards the highest-ranking female firefighter.

The month-long review against Chief of Department James Leonard was announced on Thursday after a "falling out" with First Deputy Commissioner Laura Kavanaugh and "told his staff not to talk with her about anything," a law enforcement source told the Eagle.

"He was always a good chief, and he was better off fighting fires," one official said. "He did a decent job, but he was screaming at people — and while you can disagree, you can't just flying off the handle."

Kavanaugh was senior advisor in Mayor de Blasio's election campaign and was promoted as one of FDNY Commissioner Dan Nigro's top advisers.

Leonard was respected in the field, but some say he was particularly difficult with some firefighters. "Some of the uniformed officers union are not going to be unhappy to see him go," the source said.

Leonard was appointed by Nigro in 2014, is the highest-ranking uniformed member of the Department, overseeing 15,000 uniformed Firefighters and EMS personnel.
