The 1984 case of a 16-year-old convicted for a robbery offense who was denied youthful offender status reveal flaws in the New York State conviction-sealing law and have prompted Queens Criminal Court Administrative Judge Joseph Zayas to call for legislative reforms.

The conviction-sealing law, enacted in 2017, was designed to give former offenders a second chance, but the measure's strict regulations have limited its impact and highlighted longstanding inequities in the criminal justice system, Zayas said in his Dec. 12 decision to deny an application made by a woman seeking to seal a 1984 robbery conviction.

The woman, identified by the court as Jane Doe, applied for sealing of her lone felony conviction for second-degree robbery. That

A no. 7 train chugs through Queens.

By Christina Carrega
Queens Daily Eagle

It has been 10 years since the MTA and NYPD teamed up to prevent straphangers from being groped, flashed and harassed while riding the subway or waiting on station platforms.

In 2006 — two years before how-to pamphlets and signs were created to help passengers report sexual misconduct — The New York Times published anecdotes from seven of the millions of women who ride the subway and experienced sexual violations.

Twelve years later, women — and some men — continue to endure unwanted touching, peeping or photographing up their skirts and other forms of physical sexual misconduct, as well as verbal abuse during their daily commute.

On Monday, the Eagle reported about pervasive perverted behavior on the No. 7 train, including multiple reports of forcible touching and indecent exposure, in recent weeks. There have also been at least 10 other subway sex attacks reported across the city since October, according to police.

Despite the prevalence of recent reported offenses aboard the no. 7 train, the number of reported offenses has actually decreased compared to the same time period last year, the NYPD told the Eagle.

Between Nov. 1 and Dec. 16, 2017, seven sex crimes on the no. 7 train were reported to the NYPD.

SENTENCING DAY FOR HILLCREST PREDATOR

Hillcrest resident Joel Einhorn pleaded guilty to second-degree attempted rape for allegedly attempting to lure a 13-year-old girl to meet for sex. Einhorn appears in K18 for sentencing.

An NYPD investigator posing as a 13-year-old girl responded to a personal ad allegedly posted by Einhorn on Craigslist entitled, “Daddy looking for ‘real’ Queens ‘girl’ No flakes (M4W)” in October 2016, said Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown.

Einhorn, 73, continued sending sexually explicit text messages to the investigator who told him several times that she was a 13-year-old girl. Cops arrested Einhorn when he arrived at a meeting spot he had arranged with the investigator, still under the impression that the investigator was a 13-year-old girl.

“The defendant is accused of conversing online for a month with a person who he believed to be an underage teen girl,” Brown said. “Unbeknownst to the defendant, he was actually conversing with an undercover police officer. This case illustrates the tenacity of alleged sexual predators and the amount of time they are willing to expend grooming a teen to accomplish their goal of meeting in person an underage child for sexual relations.”

Report: Ocasio-Cortez Targets Jeffries for Primary Challenge

By Paula Katinas
BQ Daily Eagle

Call it the Democrats' own "Family Feud."

U.S. Rep.-elect Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, who rocked New York's political establishment when she toppled long-time incumbent U.S. Rep. Joe Crowley in June's Democratic primary, is now said to be setting her sights on another major figure in New York politics: U.S. Rep. Hakeem Jeffries.

Politico reported yesterday that Ocasio-Cortez and a group of progressives called Justice Democrats are gunning for Jeffries' seat. The organization, with Ocasio-Cortez's blessing, has reportedly already recruited a candidate, an African-American woman, to run against Jeffries two years from now.

Jeffries, whose congressional district includes Coney Island, Canarsie and East New York in Brooklyn and Howard Beach and South Ozone Park in Queens, was recently elected to the coveted post of chairman of the House Democratic Caucus. His name has been mentioned as a future speaker of the House.

Crowley was the previous chairman of the caucus.

A primary could lead to open warfare between Ocasio-Cortez and Jeffries, two of the Democratic Party's rising stars at a time when the Democrats would be seeking to unite to try and defeat Republican President Donald Trump in 2020.

Jeffries isn't progressive enough for some on the far left of the Democratic Party, who told Politico they are upset with the lawmaker's ties to banking interests and charter school proponents.

In addition, Ocasio-Cortez is said to be upset over the fact that a contribution she made to U.S. Rep. Barbara Lee (D-California), the woman who ran against Jeffries for the chairperson position, was the subject of a whispering campaign against Lee, Politico reported.

Neither Ocasio-Cortez's nor Jeffries' offices returned messages from the Brooklyn Eagle.

In a roundtable with reporters in his district office on Monday, Jeffries, 48, said he was looking forward to working with all of the newly elected members of New York City's congressional delegation, including Ocasio-Cortez. "The Democratic Party is a big tent," he said.

Jeffries acknowledged that progressives "are the center of gravity" in the current Democratic Party. But he also added that the majority of Democrats who were able to flip House seats from red to blue in the November election "are more centrist, moderate" than many realize.

In defeating Crowley, a man who had been in office for 20 years, in the primary and winning the general election last month, Ocasio-Cortez put herself on the map. Her every move has been scrutinized by the media — and she has 1.6 million Twitter followers.

Starting in January, she will represent the 14th Congress-sional District, which includes parts of Sunnyside, Astoria, College Point, East Elmhurst and Jackson Heights in Queens and Morris Park, Parkchester, Pelham Bay and Throgs Neck in the Bronx. At the age of 29, she will be the youngest woman ever to serve in the U.S. Congress.

Stephen Witt, founder and editor of Kings County Politics, said knocking off Jeffries would be an uphill battle for Ocasio-Cortez.

"It's a huge hill to climb. It's one thing to beat Joe Crowley, who didn't even campaign to keep his seat. It's another thing to try and beat Hakeem, who works hard, is well liked and has deep roots in the community," Witt told the Eagle.

Another factor in Jeffries' favor: the configuration of the congressional district. "Three-quarters of that district is in Brooklyn. Only a small part of it is in Queens," Witt said. With her upset win over Crowley, "Ocasio-Cortez became a national star," Witt added. "But I don't know how that's going to play in Central Brooklyn."

Trump Foundation Reaches Deal To Dissolve Amid Lawsuit

By Michael R. Sisak
The Associated Press

President Donald Trump's charitable foundation reached a deal yesterday to dissolve while Trump fights allegations he misused assets for business and political purposes.

New York's attorney general and Trump Foundation lawyers filed a joint stipulation in a court laying out a process for shutting down the charity and distributing its remaining assets to other nonprofit groups.

Attorney General Barbara Underwood of Brooklyn Heights alleged in a lawsuit last spring that Trump — a one-time Queens resident — had illegally operated the foundation as an extension of his businesses and his White House campaign. That lawsuit will continue, with Underwood seeking $2.8 million in restitution and a 10-year ban on Trump and his three eldest children running any charities.

"This is an important victory for the rule of law, making clear that there is one set of rules for everyone," Underwood said in a statement. "We'll continue to move our suit forward to ensure that the Trump Foundation and its directors are held to account for their clear and repeated violations of state and federal law."

Trump had long pledged to dissolve the foundation and donate its remaining funds to charity, but his lawyers said they were thwarted by the attorney general's office, which wanted oversight over the process. Foundation officials first announced their intention to shut down more than a year ago.

Yesterday's agreement, which still needs a judge's approval, came weeks after a New York judge rejected arguments from the foundation's lawyers that the case was politically motivated and should be thrown out.

Underwood is a Democrat, as is her predecessor as attorney general, Eric Schneiderman, who started investigating the foundation in 2016 after The Washington Post reported that some of its spending personally benefited the presidential candidate. Schneiderman ordered the foundation to stop fundraising in New York.

Underwood was appointed to replace Schneiderman in May, when he resigned amid allegations that he physically abused women.

The lawsuit accused Trump of illegally using the charity's money to settle disputes involving his business empire and to boost his political fortunes during his run for the White House, including by giving out big grants of other's people money to veterans organizations during the run-up to the Iowa caucuses, the first presidential nominating contest of 2016.

Lawyers for the foundation have said any infractions were minor. They did not immediately respond to requests for comment on yesterday's agreement.

Can Artisanal Weed Compete with ‘Big Marijuana’?

By Ryan Stoa
The Conversation

You’ve heard of Big Pharma and Big Tobacco. How about Big Marijuana?

The drug’s growing legalization — with Gov. Andrew Cuomo as one of its most recent proponents — is raising concerns among small-scale marijuana farmers and retailers that the corporatization of weed may be right around the corner.

For example, earlier this year NASDAQ became the first major U.S. stock exchange to list shares of a marijuana production company. And in August, Corona-maker Constellation Brands shocked Wall Street by making a $3.8 billion investment in a Canadian marijuana producer, sparking a bull market in marijuana stocks industrywide. Even Coca-Cola is exploring opportunities to get involved.

Corporate and Wall Street interest in weed is only going to increase now that three more states have legalized recreational or medicinal marijuana use — bringing the total to 33 — while Canada recently became the second country to allow recreational uses of the drug.

I have studied the marijuana agriculture industry for the past several years, tracing its evolution from black market drug to legal intoxicant. It’s a story I tell in my book, “Craft Weed: Family Farming and the Future of the Marijuana Industry.”

With all this money pouring in, it’s fair to wonder how legalization will change the marijuana industry itself — and whether it can stay true to its hippie roots.

Small Origins

One of the unintended consequences of the federal prohibition on marijuana in the United States is that legal pot-related businesses have remained rather small.

The American marijuana farming scene, for example, has been dominated by small outdoor farmers and modest indoor warehouse growers. The alternative — large, market-share-dominating companies — would attract the attention of federal authorities.

State governments have recognized a public benefit to keeping farms small and local as well. In California, for example, most marijuana farming licenses are granted to farms limited to no more than one acre of marijuana.

The federal prohibition also prevents farmers, distributors and retailers from engaging in interstate commerce, meaning that states that legalize marijuana use must create their own local markets for homegrown small businesses to operate in.

Moneyed Interests

But as the legal marijuana industry booms, well-heeled companies and investors are trying to corner the market.

According to one estimate, consumer spending on legal marijuana products in the U.S. reached $8.5 billion in 2017, up 31 percent from the previous year. Spending is projected to reach $23.4 billion by 2022.

For comparison, beer sales are actually declining. Although total sales were a robust $111 billion in 2017, that was down 1 percent from the previous year.

Such rapid growth in the marijuana market may not be surprising, given that two-thirds of the U.S. population can now use marijuana medicinally or recreationally up from none just over two decades ago, based on my own analysis.

As a result, retail stores are becoming bigger and bolder, with chains competing to establish themselves as the Starbucks of the marijuana industry.

One of these is Seattle-based Diego Pellicer, one of the first marijuana companies to market itself as a premium brand retail chain. For now, the company’s model rests on acquiring real estate and securing deals with marijuana retailers willing to operate their business under the Diego Pellicer name. That way, if the federal prohibition is ever lifted, Diego Pellicer will be in prime position to dominate the retail market.

The immense growth potential is also attracting private equity and other investors, some of whom are partnering with celebrities whose names are linked to pot smoking. In 2016, for example, a private equity firm partnered with the Bob Marley estate to launch the Marley Natural line of marijuana products.

Patents are seen as another way a few giant companies may come to capture the pot industry. Increasingly well-funded laboratories are developing new strains of marijuana at a rapid pace, with varying degrees of strength and hardness as well as unique psychoactive and flavor profiles.

Melissa Mark-Viverito, a candidate for New York City public advocate, speaks at a news conference on Dec. 6. The former New York City Council speaker is proposing to legalize marijuana sales and use the tax revenue to help fund the city’s aging subway system.

As the U.S. Patent and Trade Office begins to issue patents, there are reports of companies attempting to gobble them up.

Finally, many in the agricultural sector of the marijuana industry are predicting and bracing for an agribusiness takeover — though this has yet to happen.

How Craft Weed Can Thrive

Are marijuana veterans right to be concerned that their industry is moving too rapidly from the black market to the stock market?

Yes and no. My own research suggests that a local, sustainable and artisanal model of marijuana production can co-exist with Big Marijuana — much as craft beer has thrived in recent years alongside the traditional macro breweries.

One reason is that whereas the illicit drug trade forced consumers to buy ambiguously sourced marijuana from street dealers, the legal market allows consumers to buy a wide variety of marijuana products from legitimate retail businesses. And more and more consumers are turning to edibles and extracts produced by highly specialized manufacturers.

The staggering number of marijuana strains being developed is creating a connoisseur culture that favors small-scale, artisanal farms that can nimbly adapt to shifts in market demand. Because such farms can market themselves as small, sustainable and local, they can better reflect 21st-century food movement ideals.

Besides efforts at the state level to limit the size of farms, another regulatory approach is the use of appellations to encourage an artisanal pot culture. I have argued that the marijuana industry is well-suited to adopt an appellation system, like you find with wine and cheeses.

Just like a Bordeaux wine comes exclusively from that region of France or Parmigiano-Reggiano is named after the areas of Italy where it originates, Humboldt marijuana may become a prestigious and legally protected designation of origin for marijuana products grown or produced in Humboldt County, California.

It is probably inevitable that Big Marijuana will take hold in some form, but that doesn’t mean the market can’t support the small businesses that have enabled marijuana to become a uniquely local and artisanal industry.

Judge Zayas' Record-Sealing Denial Highlights Shortcomings of Second-Chance Law

conviction was based on a plea deal she agreed to after she participated in the theft of a high school classmate's "unicorn charm" in 1984. It was her only brush with the justice system, but second-degree robbery is considered a violent felony, which disqualified her from having her conviction permanently sealed under current law.

Had the then-teenager been offered a plea deal for third-degree robbery — a non-violent felony — she would have been eligible for conviction-sealing, according to court documents published on Dec. 12.

"The Court, regrettably, is constrained to deny the motion because, as the People correctly contend, defendant's conviction of a violent felony offense makes her ineligible for sealing under the statute," Zayas wrote in his decision.

The law specifically enables New Yorkers with no more than two misdemeanor convictions or one felony and one misdemeanor conviction to have their convictions sealed if they have remained crime-free for 10 years. However, violent felonies, sex offenses and other "serious felonies" are not eligible for sealing — even in the cases of adolescent offenders.

Doe discovered that her 34-year-old conviction had not been sealed when she applied for a job in health services, according to court documents. She was denied the job after a background check unearthed the old conviction.

Zayas criticized the law for not taking into account an offender's youthful status — even though it was part of the Raise the Age package of legislation. Under Raise the Age, which took effect Oct. 1, an adolescent under age 18, who is charged with a robbery without the use of a "deadly weapon" and without causing significant injury, would have their case reassigned to Family Court, Zayas added.

"This case also highlights another important, yet perhaps unanticipated, shortcoming of the new sealing statute: its failure to explicitly address criminal records of younger offenders, even though it was enacted as part of the Raise the Age legislation," Zayas said, suggesting that the state legislature "consider amending [the law] to allow for the sealing of convictions of violent felony offenses committed by defendants who were eligible for youthful offender treatment, but did not receive it."

Amending the statute, Zayas continued, would enable Doe and other youthful offenders "to receive substantially the same treatment that a 16-year-old would receive today if she were arrested under similar circumstances."

Legal Aid staff attorney Emma Goodman, who leads the organization's conviction-sealing initiative, said Zayas' "hands were tied" by the limited law. But she commended him for calling on the legislature to amend the record-sealing law to include discretion and to ensure it caught up with current Raise the Age law provisions.

"The issue in this recent decision is a no-brainer because with Raise the Age, 16- and 17-year-olds are not prosecuted as adults anymore," Goodman said. "Judge Zayas' attention to this issue really raises awareness about the flaws in the sealing law. The legislature should pay attention to him and other members of the judiciary who are noticing everyday that the law could be better and really affect people's lives in a positive way."

Goodman specifically said the state Assembly and Senate should remove of "blanket exclusion" for certain types of crimes, especially in a case's like Doe's which occurred more than 30 years ago and remains her only conviction.

"Some people have done incredible things with their lives and it's not fair to say, 'You did something wrong and you'll never move past that,'" she said.

The strict provisions in the conviction-sealing law have contributed to its limited reached since taking effect in 2017. Though the state initially estimated that the law could help hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers seal old convictions and get a second chance, just a few hundred have benefited statewide so far.

As of Nov. 15, at least 52 Queens residents have had their records sealed, according to data compiled by the Queens District Attorney's office.

In total, there have been 66 decisions made on conviction-sealing applications in Queens as of Nov. 15. In addition to the 52 granted applications, 13 were denied and one was dismissed.

Twelve of the denials were based on ineligibility and one was denied "on merits." A spokesperson for the DA's office said the numbers may be incomplete because of a "lag in receiving the data."

On Monday, Gov. Andrew Cuomo unveiled an agenda for the first 100 days of his third-term, which begins Jan. 1. As part of the platform, Cuomo pledged to "Ensure Fairness in the Criminal Justice System."

As of press time, Cuomo's press office did not respond to request for comment.

Lancman, NOW Call for Investigation into Queens Rape Cases

By Victoria Merlino
Queens Daily Eagle

City Councilmember Rory Lancman and women's rights advocates have called for an investigation to determine why the NYPD is closing rape cases without proper investigations in response to a report by the criminal justice news website The Appeal.

In Queens, 27 percent of reported rapes were deemed "unfounded," or did not happen, The Appeal reported on Monday.

"It is alarming that the NYPD is declaring so many rape allegations in Queens as 'unfounded,' seemingly in many cases without doing a thorough investigation, at rates substantially higher than the rest of the city, and far beyond percentages reported across the country," Lancman, a candidate for Queens District Attorney, said in a statement. "This indifference to victims and the safety of the broader public demands investigation, as these statistics should have sent alarm bells ringing throughout law enforcement."

Multiple rape victims told the Appeal they were pressured to sign withdrawal forms without proper explanation from law enforcement. By signing the forms, they unknowingly deemed themselves "uncooperative." In 2016, the article reported, 1,551 cases were closed citywide based on the uncooperative complainant code.

National Organization of Women-Queens President Sonia Ossorio called for an investigation to determine why rape cases are being closed without proper investigations.

"This is just another concerning issue of how the NYPD is failing sexual assault victims," National Organization of Women-Queens president Sonia Ossorio told the Eagle. "More resources need to be put into the department to meet the demand of rape reports that are coming in."

In March, the Department of Investigations (DOI) released a report that found that the NYPD's Special Victims Division (SVD) has been understaffed for at least the past nine years and unable to handle the caseload.

According to the DOI report, the NYPD's homicide squad had 101 detectives to handle 282 homicides in 2017, but the SVD had 67 detectives to handle 5,661 sexual assault cases that year.

"Current and former SVD staff, sex crime prosecutors, service providers, and victims' advocates all confirmed to DOI that chronic understaffing and inexperience have 'diluted' and 'shortened' investigations, jeopardized prosecutions, re-traumatized victims, and negatively impacted the reporting of sex crimes, thereby adversely affecting public safety," the report read.

DOI recommended that SVD add more staff members, increase training opportunities and investigate rapes that were deemed lower priority, such as "domestic rape" and "acquaintance rape." The report found that understaffing can push those types cases to the precinct level, where detectives are not trained in sex crimes investigations.

"That DOI report aligned strikingly with the demands that advocates had made to the police commissioner," Ossorio said. "When we saw the report, it validated everything that we had been seeing."

Ossorio said NOW called on the mayor to address the issue.

The NYPD restructured the SVD following the DOI report and received a new division head.

The NYPD told The Appeal that the new deputy chief of the division is reviewing procedures and will make changes to the withdrawal form.

Lancman has crusaded against sex crimes in the past, notably introducing the City Council bill that outlawed "revenge porn," or the sharing of explicit photos or video of someone online without their consent, in New York City.

New Biography Explores the Life of Philosopher Denis Diderot

BQ Daily Eagle

Denis Diderot (1713-1784) conceived of natural selection almost 100 years before Charles Darwin, pondered genetic manipulation 200 years before Dolly the Sheep and inspired the likes of Karl Marx, Sigmund Freud and Charles Baudelaire.

Yet most of his greatest works were revealed only after his death. Those who'd lamented that the enlightenment philosopher and infamous atheist hadn't fully lived up to his genius were shocked to discover that he'd spent the last third of his life secretly writing, producing a breathtaking collection of essays, letters, plays and novels that still influence our thinking about life, art, God and sex.

After being arrested for his atheism and outspoken beliefs at age 35, Diderot had decided that his contemporaries would never be receptive to his ideas and determined to write his life's work for future generations — for us.

In "Diderot and the Art of Thinking Freely," award-winning historian and professor Andrew S. Curran breaks the paradigm of the biography, offering both an in-depth, yet accessible and entertaining account of the life of one of the 18th-century's major intellectual thinkers.

At a moment when we are once again confronting the major questions of freedom, global responsibility and human authenticity in a fractious and technology-driven world, "Diderot and the Art of Thinking Freely" follows the passionate, stubborn and heretical philosopher from the Newton-influenced, politically changing world of his birth, through his contradictory roles as aspiring priest, hopeless romantic, unapologetic adulterer, author and swindler.

In the book, we see a skeptical young student discovering the works of Voltaire, Francis Bacon, John Locke and Isaac Newton, rejecting God and religion, evolving into a renowned intellectual both extolled and denounced for his views. Employing a deft conversational quality to his writing, Curran's latest is a timely reminder that philosophy, and the preeminent figures who dedicated lifetimes to grapple with its concepts and mark its history, still have much to say about real life.

At age 35, Diderot published "Letter on the Blind," in which he revealed his atheism, and for which he was arrested and spent several months in jail. This proved a pivotal moment in his life. After his release, Diderot saved his most radical thoughts for his secret works.

Publicly, he focused much of the next 25 years as the lead editor and contributor to the most controversial (and profitable) book of the 18th-century: the "Encyclopedie," a living, breathing text containing over 70,000 articles of the world's knowledge, designed with thousands of cross references connecting arcane areas of study.

As Curran outlines in "Diderot and the Art of Thinking Freely," its publication was rife with scandals, near-cancellations and confiscations, involving the Sorbonne, the Paris Parliament, the Jesuits, the Jansenists, the king and the Pope himself. When the last of its volumes was published in 1765, Diderot believed they had brought the world's knowledge, and therefore intellectual freedom, to everyone, from France to Russia and across the Atlantic.

Curran reveals a talkative, enthusiastic man who spent his life relentlessly and obsessively pursuing knowledge and trying to share it with the world — both during his lifetime and posthumously. Diderot debated materialism and politics with Catherine the Great (often slapping the empress' thigh during particularly animated discussions), argued the merits of Shakespeare with Voltaire, and had a close friendship and very public falling out with the great philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau.

"Diderot and the Art of Thinking Freely" reveals a complex and contradictory man in constant motion who spent his life learning, considering, writing, and debating philosophy, art, colonialism, marriage, love and politics — often with absolute conviction. Diderot's work has echoed throughout history, and this unique biography captures both his prolific life and his lasting impact.

Curran, a New York native, is the William Armstrong professor of the Humanities at Wesleyan University. His major publications include an edited volume, "Faces of Monstrosity in Eighteenth-Century Thought in Eighteenth-Century Life," and two books: "Sublime Disorder: Physical Monstrosity in Diderot's Universe" and "The Anatomy of Blackness: Science and Slavery in an Age of Enlightenment."

Elected a fellow in the history of medicine at the New York Academy of Medicine in 2010, Curran has also received fellowships from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Mellon Foundation and the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. He was the co-winner of the James L. Clifford Prize for the best article in 18th-century studies in 2011 and received a National Endowment for the Humanities Public Scholars award in 2016.

Chelsea Clinton Working on Book About Endangered Animals

The Associated Press

Chelsea Clinton's career as a children's author continues with a picture book about endangered animals.

Penguin Young Readers announced Monday that the daughter of Bill and Hillary Clinton is collaborating with illustrator Gianna Marino on "Don't Let Them Disappear." Scheduled for April 2, the book will celebrate whales, tigers and other animals and provide advice on how to help preserve them.

Clinton said in a statement that she wanted to help young people learn that some animals are in "desperate need of our attention." Her previous works include "She Persisted: 13 American Women Who Changed the World" and "Start Now! You Can Make a Difference."

Duo Pleads Guilty To LIC Acid Attack, Embezzlement Scheme

By Jonathan Sperling
Queens Daily Eagle

A Bronx accountant and her associate are facing up to 17 years in prison after pleading guilty to attacking the executive director of a Long Island City non-profit with acid and embezzling $750,000.

Kim Williams, 49, of Kingsbridge and Jerry Mohammed, 35, of Troy, N.Y. pled guilty to first-degree assault before Queens Supreme Court Justice Ira Margulis, Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown announced on Tuesday.

"In pleading guilty, the former employee now admits to stealing from an organization that used its funds to help those in need. The two defendants together plotted to take grave steps to conceal this crime," Brown said in a statement. "The duo jointly conspired to inflict bodily harm to an innocent woman, the organization's director, who was looking into the missing funds. As a result of the acid attack, the victim suffered pain and disfiguring injuries to her face and body. At sentencing the two defendants will face a long term of incarceration for their criminal actions."

Between 2013 and 2015, Williams and Mohammed embezzled $750,000 from Hospital Audiences Inc., a non-profit agency located on Skillman Avenue that provided access to the arts to disabled individuals. Williams pocketed $600,000 of the funds for herself and gave the remaining $150,000 to a close friend, according to court filings.

The victim, Reverend D. Alexandra Dyer, was the agency's executive director, and had begun investigating the embezzlement scheme in 2015. On the night of Aug. 19, 2015, Williams and Mohammed attacked Dyer in an attempt to thwart her attempts at uncovering the embezzlement scheme.

Right after Dyer exited the agency's office building, Queens Criminal Court Justice Ira Margulis indicated that he will sentence Kim Williams and Jerry Mohammed to 17 years in prison after they pleaded guilty to first-degree assault for burning a man with lye.

Mohammed threw caustic lye on her, causing severe burns to her face and other parts of her body. As a result of the incident, Dyer had to undergo multiple surgeries and remains disfigured.

Margulis indicated that he would sentence both Williams and Mohammed to 17 years in prison on Jan. 17, 2019, Brown said.

'El Chapo' Trial Becomes NYC's Latest Tourist Attraction

By Claudia Torrens
Associated Press

There was a time, after a spectacular prison escape, when Joaquin Guzman was the most wanted man in the world.

The thrill of being able to see the man known as El Chapo up close — and live to tell the tale — has been drawing curious New Yorkers, fans of TV crime shows and even tourists to the Brooklyn courtroom where the infamous Mexican drug trafficker is being tried on charges that could put him in a U.S. prison for life.

Some days, they are just two people among all the prosecutors, reporters, security officials and team of lawyers who fill up the courtroom. Other days you may see five. They sit up straight in the spectator area and look up so they can see Guzman's face. They also look with curiosity at his wife, Emma Coronel, who sits in the courtroom's public gallery nearly every day.

"It was surreal. It was like I was seeing the (Netflix) TV show 'El Chapo,'" said spectator Peter Stolt, 23, who attended three days of the trial in November and hopes to show up for at least one more.

Stolt, who recently graduated from Muhlenberg College in Pennsylvania and is interviewing for jobs in New York, said he has stood in line outside the building at around 6:30 am to make sure he gets a seat.

What impressed him most, he said, was when Miguel Angel Martinez, a former assistant to Guzman who is now a prosecution witness, testified in dramatic detail how he survived several attempts on his life that he claimed were ordered by Guzman, one after an ominous serenade by a Mexican brass band.

"The grenade, the song," he said. "It's crazy. That was scary. It's crazy that we are hearing this firsthand."

The diminutive Guzman,

In this Dec. 3, 2018 photo, Australian tourists Wayne and Lydia Burg stand in front of Brooklyn's federal courthouse in New York, where they were attending the trial of Mexican drug trafficker Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman. Burg is a criminal lawyer in his home country and said he did not want to miss the chance to witness one day in the trial of "El Chapo."

whose nickname means "Shorty" in Spanish, was extradited to the United States last year to face charges accusing him of running the Sinaloa cartel, which smuggled tons of cocaine into the U.S.

The six weeks of testimony from law enforcement officials, an imprisoned cocaine kingpin from Colombia and flashy Mexican drug smugglers have contained enough material to fill several seasons of "Miami Vice" or "Narcos." There has been testimony about secret smuggling tunnels built beneath the border, assassination attempts, bribery of high level police officials, private jets filled with millions of dollars in cash, and factories churning out cocaine-filled cans disguised as hot pepper containers.

Guzman's lawyers say the lowlife cooperators are lying in an attempt to frame him and get an easier sentence in their own drug-trafficking cases.

Joaquin Martinez, a 55-year-old Mexican who has lived in New York for more than a decade, said seeing El Chapo in person was worth the trip from Manhattan to Brooklyn. However, he expected him with a moustache, like in many of the photos people have seen of him over the years.

"It took me a couple of seconds to realize it was him.

To be honest, he looked like ... a regular person," he said.

He was more impressed by Coronel, Guzman's wife, who he thought walked around the courtroom confidently, as if she were in her own home. She sat in a bench in front of him.

"I could smell her perfume," said Martinez, who owns and manages several restaurants in New York. Hearing phone recordings of drug dealings in the courtroom impressed him, he said, but also when prosecutors showed as evidence a photograph of Amado Carrillo, a Mexican drug lord who is famous in his home country and who died in 1997 in a plastic surgery operation to change his face.

Spectators go through security in the lobby of the building and need to remove their shoes to go through a second metal detector and X-ray bag scanner on the eighth floor. Then they sign up on a sheet.

Wayne Burg, a 49-year-old Australian criminal lawyer, went to see the trial with his 21-year-old daughter, Lydia, during their December vacation in New York. Going to federal court to see El Chapo was a must-do before a Knicks game.

"The amount of drugs, the amount of money ... these are extraordinary levels," said Burg, who ended up with his daughter in the overflow room, watching on a video feed, because there was no space in the courtroom.

"We had a great holiday, but the case was one of the highlights!" he said.

Not all days are exciting.

Some members of the jury have dozed off when technical aspects of law enforcement drug searches have been explained. Guzman, however, always seems to pay attention, looking at witnesses when they speak and whispering to his lawyers' ears.

For those interested in going, there is still time. The trial may last for two more months.

U.S. Rep. Maloney Petitions For Engine Company to Return to LIC

By Victoria Merlino and Jonathan Sperling
Queens Daily Eagle

U.S. Rep. Carolyn Maloney, members of Uniformed Fire Officers Association and Uniformed Firefighters Association and several local elected officials gathered to call for the reinstatement of FDNY Engine Company 261 in Long Island City on Wednesday.

State Assemblymember Catherine Nolan and Councilmember Jimmy Van Bramer, who both represent the Long Island City area, also joined Maloney in calling for the return of Engine Company 261, at FDNY Ladder Company 116, located at 37-20 29th St. in LIC.

Maloney, who's 12th Congressional District contains a large swath of Western Queens, along with parts of Manhattan and Brooklyn, also penned a letter to Mayor Bill de Blasio asking for the return of the engine company.

Support for the re-opening of Engine Company 261, which was closed by a Mayor Michael Bloomberg-era cost cutting measure in 2003 comes as the population in and around LIC rises to new highs. As of 2015, LIC and Astoria have a combined total population of over 201,000 people, according to the NYC Department of Health's Community Health Profile for the area.

Maloney called on the FDNY to re-open a fire company in LIC.

Judge Love Inducted to Supreme Court Bench

By Andy Katz

Queens Daily Eagle
Various Queens County elected officials, judges and attorneys joined Judge Larry Love and his family at the Queens Civil Courthouse Monday for Love's induction to the Supreme Court bench.

Several speakers cited Love's commitment to Queens, his home borough.

"He cares about his community, and, most importantly, he cares about justice," said Queens Democratic Party Executive Secretary Michael Reich. "I want to thank the residents of Queens for electing such a fine Justice. He's the mensch on the bench."

Queens Deputy Chief Administrative Judge George Silver praised Love's personality and pursuit of justice.

"I'm so thrilled to have Larry in my life, in the same dimension," Silver said. "I hear all of the good and all of the bad, but with Larry it's all good. When I think of access to justice, I think of Larry Love."

After being presented with his robe and taking his oath of office with Queens County Clerk Audrey Pfeffer, Love thanked the family, friends, colleagues and mentors who helped him on his path to the bench. Love specifically honored his father David Love.

"It has been an honor to serve the people of Queens in that capacity as [Civil Court judge]." Love said, before thanking court staff, support personnel and the county Democratic leaders who had supported him in his bid.

Queens Democratic Party Executive Secretary Michael Reich congratulated Love in a speech at the induction ceremony.

State Announces $250K Grant To C4Q Tech Training Program

By David Brand

Queens Daily Eagle
The Coalition for Queens (C4Q) will receive $150,000 from Empire State Development and $100,000 from Department of Labor as part of a statewide round of Regional Economic Development Council initiative funding.

The money for C4Q, which trains low-income New Yorkers for software development jobs, completes a $750,000 expansion of the organization's Center for the Future Workforce. The grant enables the C4Q to add two classrooms and four workshop and meeting spaces, Gov. Andrew Cuomo said in a statement.

"Over the last eight years, we have implemented a vision to move New York State's economy forward by allowing communities to make strategic investments to help grow their local economies and re-energize and develop their unique regions," Cuomo said. "Regional-based economic development is vital for maintaining New York's thriving [and] prosperous economy."

C4Q, which is based in Long Island City, also provides job placement and career support for three years after individuals complete the training program.
